Health Insurance and Health Care: A Comparison of the United States and the Netherlands

Walter P. de Haan, University of Groningen; and Robert A. Rosenbaum, University of Michigan

Health insurance and health care are two different concepts, but they are often confused. The United States and the Netherlands have different health insurance systems, but they have similar health care systems. This article compares the health insurance and health care systems of the United States and the Netherlands. It shows that the United States has a more complex health insurance system than the Netherlands, but a similar health care system. The article discusses the reasons for these differences and the implications for health policy.
